ET's roundup of the wackiest whispers in corporate corridors

Catch'em Fresh
Guest who suddenly the hottest segment in the talent management business? The Indian women's cricket team that justified the World Cup. While the top stars are already taken, it's the emerging players who are the new battleground. Agencies are out-doing themselves to sign the fresh talent, given the promise they have shown in long and promising careers.

New Headache
The recent GST regime has lifted upsets, but companies in some sectors are in a rowdier mood. Input costs have gone up post the tax cut, but manufacturers fear revising prices and inviting charges of profiteering. TV makers are already facing the heat, thanks to a sharp decline in memory chip prices. Companies affected are in a huddle and now plan to approach the government seeking clarity—and the green signal—on imposing the higher costs.

HC Questions Patanjali over Ad Terming Chyawanprash Brands as Fraud
Our Bureau
New Delhi: The Delhi High Court on Thursday questioned Patanjali Ayurved, the parent company of Patanjali Foods, for terming chyawanprash, products manufactured by other companies as fraud in its new advertisement.

Patanjali can claim to be the best, but can't say that others are fraud, the judge said
The court was hearing the Dabur India's petition which alleged that Patanjali Ayurved's advertisement issued last month had disparaged its chyawanprash products by labelling all other such products as 'fraud'. Patanjali co-founder Baba Ramdev was seen in an ad saying most people were falling victim to fraud while buying chyawanprash and they should not only Patanjali's special chyawanprash for the real power of Ayurveda, senior counsel Sandeep Sethi, appearing for Dabur, argued, adding that it is "very serious because people identify with a yoga guru with some sense of truthfulness".

Dabur alleged the commercial deliberately maligns its flagship Dabur Chyawanprash which has dominated the market since 1949 with over 65% market share. Such messages in the ad constitutes "slandering" or "disparagement" of Chyawanprash category, eroding consumer faith in Ayurveda-based health supplements," it said, adding they cannot paint everybody with the same brush.

Chips are Down for Handset Cos Amid AI Boom

Some manufacturers hike smartphone prices on rising component costs and supply woes

Subhojit Mallick

New Delhi: Smartphone makers are facing a shortage of critical components such as memory chips and storage devices to supply devices. The shortage is fuelling a demand for AI hardware, prompting some firms to increase prices, particularly of entry-level handsets.

Spain's Antolin to Put India Biz on Back for €150m

Mohit Bhalla

New Delhi: Spanish auto components maker Grupo Antolin is looking to sell its India business for €150 million and has engaged advisers for the sale, as per people familiar with the matter. The €1 billion family-controlled company serves the who's who of global passenger vehicle makers such as Alpha Romeo, Ferrari, Aston Martin, Skoda, Volkswagen and Hyundai, to name a few.

"We do not comment on market speculation or rumours," said a spokesperson for Grupo Antolin when contacted by ET. The company's headquarters are located in the Spanish city of Burgos. It started as a mechanics garage in the 1950s. The sale is being arranged as part of a liquidity management exercise because Grupo Antolin has committed investments annually to bondholders.

The company is 100% privately owned by the Antolin family. Grupo Antolin makes car interiors such as headliners, roof rails, door and dashboard trims and lighting systems for passenger vehicles.

It has been present in India for two decades and operates six manufacturing plants. These are located at Bengaluru, Chennai, Gurugram, Pune, Surat and Vijayawada.

Industry watchers said there are other European auto components players that may look at their India businesses due to liability management concerns back home. They didn't name any that are actively pursuing divestments. On the contrary, India's auto components sector has been witnessing a growing trend of foreign investments through the private equity route.

ET's roundup of the wackiest whispers in corporate corridors

Pressure Points

Manufacturers say... Importing as many chips as needed to keep material costs from rising too much

Handset makers Oppo: Hiked prices by ₹2,000 across most of its high-end and mid-range models

Retailers say... Higher prices may hurt sales that have started trending down after a festive-season slump

Vivo & Samsung: Have also raised prices of some models by ₹500-1,500

Xiaomi: Holding on to its price tags this month

An executive from a top smartphone assembler in India who did not wish to be named said its customers are finding it difficult to source memory chips, especially for entry-level smartphones, which rely on older generation chips.

"We just cannot do a stellar festive season with some left-over inventory of components, which we are using to keep prices stable in the short run," the executive said. "However, the next batch will be sourced at a higher price, which may be passed on to the consumers."

A weaker rupee has also made importing components more expensive, the executives said.

Besides chips, other critical components such as the processor and so on are expected to face inflationary pricing trends next year, experts said. According to industry trackers, major foundries are raising wafer prices, driven largely by increasing chip complexities and strong demand from sectors like AI and high-performance computing.

This would impact chip production costs for the likes of Apple, MediaTek, Qualcomm and Nvidia. Industry research firm TrendForce, the driving force behind this pricing shift are TSMC's escalating manufacturing expenses, particularly its massive investments in Arizona, as well as unrivalled dominance in the global foundry market, it said.

"But price hikes may hit smartphone sales."

"We are already seeing sales dropping dramatically," said Kailash Lalbani, chairman of All India Mobile Retailers Association (AIMRA) which represents over 10,000 mobile phone retailers in India. "Sales are now comparable to September last month and going forward, we are expecting a further drop in sales."

Francis Wong, head of product marketing at Realme said, "Memory and storage costs are not moving in the same cycles we know before. The AI revolution has rewritten the rules, creating massive demand for high-end memory that fuels data centres and machine learning systems. The same chips once used in smartphones are now heavily pulled toward powering generative AI models, leaving the industry to rethink how we build, price, and associated values."

spokesperson said, adding that the firm is "closely tracking these market shifts."

The Chinese brand is expected to relent to pricing pressure next year with its new model. "The input cost pressures continue, the industry may witness broader price revisions in 2026," the spokesperson told ET.

बेवजह वजन घटने को न करें इग्नोर

अगर किसी का बेवजह वजन कम हो जाए तो यह कैंसर का सबसे बड़ा संकेत हो सकता है। यहां बता दें कि कैंसर के कारण वजन घटने की वजह से शरीर की रीढ़ की हड्डी कमजोर हो जाती है, जो कि रीढ़ की हड्डी को तोड़ने का कारण बन सकती है। इसलिए, अगर आपका वजन बिना किसी कारण के कम हो रहा हो, तो इसे नजरअंदाज न करें।
